Enclosure:

Leopard geckos need an enclosure that is at least 20 gallons in size. The enclosure should be made of glass or plastic and have a secure lid. The top of the enclosure should be covered with a mesh screen to allow for air circulation.

Temperature:

Leopard geckos need a warm enclosure with a temperature gradient. The temperature gradient should range from 75-85 degrees Fahrenheit on the warm side to 65-75 degrees Fahrenheit on the cool side. You can create a temperature gradient by using a heat lamp or a heat mat.

UVB Light:

Leopard geckos need a UVB light source to help them absorb calcium. UVB lights should be replaced every 6 months.

Hiding Place:

Leopard geckos need a place to hide to feel safe. You can provide a hiding place by using a cave, a rock, or a piece of wood.

Diet:

Leopard geckos are insectivores, which means they eat insects. You can feed your leopard gecko a variety of live insects, such as crickets, mealworms, and dubia roaches. You can also offer your leopard gecko occasional vegetables, such as lettuce, carrots, and squash.

Leopard Gecko Lifespan

Leopard geckos typically live for 10-15 years in captivity. With proper care, some leopard geckos can live for up to 20 years.

Leopard Gecko Morphs

There are many different morphs of leopard geckos available. Morphs are different color and pattern variations. Some of the most popular morphs include the albino, the blizzard, and the giant.

Leopard Gecko Health

Leopard geckos are generally healthy animals. However, they can be susceptible to a variety of health problems, such as respiratory infections, digestive problems, and metabolic bone disease.

Respiratory infections:

Respiratory infections are one of the most common health problems in leopard geckos. Symptoms of a respiratory infection include sneezing, wheezing, and difficulty breathing.

Digestive problems:

Digestive problems are another common health problem in leopard geckos. Symptoms of a digestive problem include vomiting, diarrhea, and constipation.

Metabolic bone disease:

Metabolic bone disease is a condition that occurs when a leopard gecko does not get enough calcium. Symptoms of metabolic bone disease include soft bones, fractures, and deformities.

Leopard Gecko Handling

Leopard geckos are gentle animals that can be handled with care. However, it is important to remember that leopard geckos are not toys. You should always handle your leopard gecko with respect.

When handling your leopard gecko, it is important to support its body and tail. You should also avoid handling your leopard gecko for extended periods of time.

If your leopard gecko is agitated or stressed, it may try to bite you. If your leopard gecko bites you, it is important to remain calm and wash the wound with soap and water.

Leopard Gecko

Leopard geckos are fascinating and beautiful creatures that make great pets. If you are thinking about getting a leopard gecko as a pet, be sure to do your research and provide your gecko with the proper care.
