The infamous House of Secrets at 130 Cade Wood, Amityville, New York.

Nestled amidst the tranquil neighborhood of Amityville, New York, lies a house shrouded in an aura of mystery and terror. Known as the "House of Secrets," 130 Cade Wood has become synonymous with one of the most chilling true crime stories in American history.

The tale of 130 Cade Wood begins in 1956, when Ronald DeFeo Jr. and his family moved into the spacious colonial home. Over the next two decades, the DeFeo family would experience a series of unexplainable events, including strange noises, apparitions, and disembodied voices.

In November 1974, tragedy struck when Ronald DeFeo Jr. murdered his parents, two brothers, and two sisters in their beds. The horrific crime sent shockwaves through the community and beyond.

In December 1975, George and Kathleen Lutz and their three children moved into 130 Cade Wood, hoping for a fresh start after the DeFeo murders. However, their stay would be short-lived, as they were forced to flee the house just 28 days later.

The Lutz family claimed to have experienced a barrage of paranormal phenomena during their brief time at 130 Cade Wood, including:

- Flying objects and furniture
- Unexplained footsteps and voices
- Disembodied screams and laughter
- Visions of a young boy and a demonic pig

The Lutz family's story was later adapted into the popular horror film "The Amityville Horror" (1979), which further cemented the house's reputation as a haunted dwelling.

The Investigation

In the wake of the Lutz family's departure, several paranormal investigators conducted investigations at 130 Cade Wood. One of the most well-known investigations was conducted by Ed and Lorraine Warren, who claimed to have documented numerous instances of paranormal activity at the house.

The Warrens' investigation included:

- EVP (electronic voice phenomenon) recordings of disembodied voices
- Photographs of alleged paranormal entities
- Seances with the spirits of the DeFeo family

The Warrens' findings were controversial and widely debated, but they added fuel to the legend of the House of Secrets.

The Skeptics

Despite the claims of paranormal activity at 130 Cade Wood, there are many skeptics who believe that the events that occurred there can be explained by natural causes or psychological factors.

Some skeptics have pointed to the fact that the DeFeo family had a history of mental illness, which could have contributed to their experiences at the house.

Others have suggested that the Lutz family was simply seeking publicity and financial gain from their claims of paranormal activity.

The Current Owner

In 2017, 130 Cade Wood was sold to a private owner who has chosen to remain anonymous. The new owner has reportedly made extensive renovations to the house, including removing the infamous "Red Room" where the DeFeo murders took place.

The current owner has also banned all paranormal investigations and tours of the house, stating that they want to respect the privacy of the DeFeo family and the victims of the murders.

The House of Secrets at 130 Cade Wood remains one of the most enigmatic and controversial haunted houses in American history. While some believe that it is a genuine hotbed of paranormal activity, others dismiss it as a hoax or the result of psychological factors.

Whether or not you believe in the haunted nature of 130 Cade Wood, there is no doubt that it is a house with a dark and fascinating past. Its legacy will continue to captivate and chill for generations to come.
